Climate Refugees in Scandinavia: The Intersection of Human Security and Environmental Stress in Iceland

by Cătălin-Gabriel DONE

Climate change represents one of the most significant challenges of the 21st century, affecting ecosystems, economies, social relations, human societies and global peace (Buhaug et al. 2023). Rising temperatures, shifting weather patterns, and an increase in the frequency of extreme weather events pose considerable risks to the environment and the stability of global social systems. While the impacts of climate change are felt worldwide, certain regions are particularly vulnerable due to their geographical and environmental characteristics. The Nordic region, including Scandinavia, is one such area that faces specific and growing challenges related to climate change (International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies - Climate Centre 2024).
